Newspapers have been published in the United States for over 200 years, with some scattered local publications dating back another 100 years. These newspapers may have invaluable genealogically- relevant information about our ancestors.

How do we find that information?

Janice M. Sellers is a professional genealogist and the founder of Ancestral Discoveries. One of her several specialties is Newspaper Research. Janice will share with us some “tricks of the trade” that will help us discover what information is available online and how to find it.

Our meetings are free and open to the public.
